FYI

On February 22, a public symposium will take place on Muskrat Falls in Happy Valley-Goose Bay. It will be hosted by the Royal Society of Canada, in collaboration with the Labrador Institute, Memorial University's Department of Philosophy, and Newfoundland and Labrador NPO For a New Earth. Diana may have already shared this info, but as the IEAC is attending and giving a basic summary of what it's tasked with and the terms of reference. The IEAC's Research Director, Marina Biasutti-Brown will speak on behalf of the IEAC.

It is billed as the following: "This is a venue for all voices: researchers who study Muskrat Falls, artists and scholars interested in this and related environmental issues, community leaders, Land Protectors, and the general public. It's time to tell the whole story of Muskrat Falls, in all of its scientific, economic, social and political-ecological complexity."
